The Future of Software Testing:

TCL and uTest bring On-Demand Software Testing to the UK

Industry leaders join forces to offer community-based QA to UK software companies

LONDON – 10 March, 2009 – Transition Consulting Limited (TCL) and uTest today announced the creation of a partnership to bring on-demand software testing to the UK. TCL, an industry-leading pure play software testing consultancy, can now connect with uTest's global community of 14,000 professional testers. This enables TCL to provide customers with a quick and cost-effective option to get their applications to market.

On-demand testing is a simple, yet ingenious addition to TCL's offering. Companies can build a virtual QA team based upon their testing requirements, such as location, language, operating system and browser. They then get real-time bug reporting and application feedback from uTest's global QA community.

"The Partnership with uTest is a really exciting join up in our global vision for software testing. It enables our Clients to have an instant, on-demand, scalable team from handpicked geographies, languages and with appropriate skills."

Tony Prosser, Managing Director, TCL EU

This partnership will enable TCL clients to test and release their web, desktop and mobile applications with confidence, and to accelerate their time to market. Customers pay only for those bugs that they approve.

"Partnering with an innovative leader like TCL is another validation of uTest's crowdsourced testing model. TCL has an established track record of excellent service, as well as an impressive roster of clients. We're excited to partner with them and to help TCL provide world-class testing services to companies."

Marc Weinstein, Vice President of Business Development, uTest
